Feed Energy Company Celebrates 20 Years of Growth and Innovation

Des Moines, IA – July 10, 2006 – Feed Energy Company today announced that it is celebrating the 20th anniversary of ownership by Robert G. Riley, Jr. A 37-year veteran in the feed business, Mr. Riley purchased the 10-year-old Feed Energy in 1986. His vision was to build a company based on the foundation of real science and real solutions for the livestock and poultry producers it served.

Feed Energy is one of North America's largest processors of soybean soap stock into acidulated vegetable oil. Products are customized according customer needs and, in addition to feed ingredient applications, are used in dust control products, crop oils, power generation and other industrial uses.

“The entire Feed Energy team has very strong customer relationships which really keeps us motivated to provide even higher levels of product quality and service,” states Mr. Riley. “More and more we are being looked to as the premier provider of customized and innovative feeding solutions,” he continues.

While Feed Energy has a strong record of success, it continues to focus on the challenges and opportunities of the future. One area where Feed Energy is uniquely qualified, because of market knowledge, experience and existing processing systems, is the important role they play in complementing national initiatives in the area of bio-renewable fuels. Another area where Feed Energy is earning a national reputation is its ability to improve the quality and functionality of the food supply.

Feed Energy's corporate headquarters, as well as the original plant location, is located in Des Moines, IA. Feed Energy also has full service plants in Sioux City and Pacific Junction, IA. A dedicated fleet of tankers services customers in seven Mid-western states.
